THE WASHINGTON CRITIC. Washington, D. C.

RICHARD H. SYLVESTER, - - Editor

WASHINGTON, MARCH 15, 1887.

THE SINALOA SWINDLE.
THE CERTIC was in hopes that the American Co-operative Colony, recently started in the Mexican State of Sinaloa under the auspices of the "Credit Foncier," would prove a success. Not that we had much faith in the projectors of the scheme, nor that we believe much in Americans expa triating themselves with the expecta-tion of bettering their condition, but simply because failure meant great suffering and less to the colonids, composed in no small part of women and children, and bready of people unfitted to become the founders of a new commonwealth leaves little doubt as to its utter and hopoless collapse. He confesses him self the victim of a glashic swindle and all who were induced by plausible misrepresentations to put their money into it as likewise victims; and, what

Whether Mr. Owen, who posed as the central figure of the syndicate, is knave or crank, he is equally irre-sponsible. The certificate holders have paid their money into the pool, and it is gone. They find themselves tenants by sufferance of lands to which they have no title and of which the soil is worthless: without houses, without market facilities, without water, with out means, the most of them cut off from communication with the United States, evertaken by disease, sur-rounded by people of indolent habits rounced by people of motion motion and a strange tongus, and literally wrecked upon the desolate shores of Puerte and Topolebampe,

It may become necessary for the States from which these deluded people migrated to provide the means for host ground to the states. their return. It is scarcely conceivable that they will be able to remain and effect a permanent settlement. Hun-dreds of thousands of dollars have been paid in to the agents of the concern and in all human probability restitu-tion is impossible; but those who have absorbed the money, whoever they are or wherever they can be found, should be either hunted out of the country or into the positionitary.

It is barely possible that Mr. Owen may be able to offer explanations somewhat mitigating the grievousness of the case, showing it to have been a blumber rather than a wrong, but in the light of present information it looks like both on a very aggravated scale.

THE SUNDAY NALDON.

Mayor Hewitt of New York and the Exche Board of that vity, are in favor of licensing the sale of laser and wine on Sundays, and a bill to this effect. notherizing the issue of special license in the discretion of the Excise Commis stoners, has been drafted for presenta tion to the Legislature. The idea bunderstood to have originated with Mr. Hewitt, it was he, at least, who first made the auggestion, but certainly no with any expectation that it would ever be sanctioned at Albany. There is a large element of the forgive its jurisprudence a respect and character which its national import-ance demands. The President has had experience in courts to an extent which familiarizes him with the importance of an able bench, and it is hoped that in this matter he will eign population of the Metropolis to which the proposed legislation would probably be acceptable; and if it were exercise his prerogative with an eye single to the character and judicial ability of the new appointees. possible to so regulate the Sunday at ternoon and evening traffic which Mr Hewitt recommends, as only to include the orderly and respectable classes within its provisions, the law would be unobjectionable. But experience has shown that social usages which are entirely proper in Paris or Berlin, con tributing largely to the happiness and ent of the people, simply cause the people possess a rational faculty of enjoying the good things of life without abusing them, cannot be safely transplanted to American soll, even under the best of police regula-

The German and Frenchman can make a holiday out of Sunday without at all violating the religious sanctity of the day; nor would they disturb the peace of the city were the wine and beer saloons to be kept open all the day long. Their drinking is much more of a family matter than it is with the average American—something no to be ashamed of and for everybody about the house to enjoy-and they cannot understand why it is that, having the freedom of the saloons all the week, they should be compelled to sneak into side doors or dodge police men up blind alleys in order to get a glass of beer on Sunday. But Mayor Hewitt would soon find out that it would never do to throw open the drinking places to the hetero-geneous population of New York—the idle and vicious, the habitually interperate and disorderly classes—and cor-vert the metropolitan Sunday into general holiday with its feative across paniments. To thousands of people such a holiday would be a day of noise excess and dissipation, and not of rost

A law permitting the sale of wine and beer would be made to cover the sale of all kinds of liquors, and instead of being limited to well behaved and respectable patrons would necessarily extend to the rictous and depraved, and prove an additional incentive to im-providence on the part of many who can least afford to drink up their workly asylors.

It may be urged that a license to sell on certain stringent conditions is better than persistent evasion of existing law, but all laws are evaded and the license would be quite as much abused as the prohibition. Considering all the cir-cumstances we cannot believe that Mr Hewlit's proposition is in the line of sound public policy, neither will it be ustained by public spinion.
